UNCLAIMED U. S. FORTUNES
ARE LURE OF EUROPEANS

Stories of Those Who Died Here
Intestate Are Eagerly
Read Abroad.

New York.—Extravagant stories of fortunes made in America have led many families in Europe to search their memories for relatives who emigrated to the New world. Newspapers are now closely scanned for the names of those who have died leaving unclaimed fortunes. Before the war the families may or may not have been glad to hear from their American kin, but today they are eager to exploit any possibility that a relative, dying intestate, left a fortune.

The post-war idea of organization has come to their assistance. In Bucharest a syndicate has just been formed for the purpose of tracing the heirs to unclaimed American fortunes. The syndicate in seeking publicity expects to receive information from Rumanian families who suspect that their American kin died in affluent circumstances without remembering to make a will.

Even before the war, however, European imaginations were fired by reports of colossal unclaimed fortunes in America. Perhaps the most romantic of these is the Horowitz fortune in San Francisco, which, since the death of Bishop Horowitz in 1888 has, it is said, increased to millions of dollars and still awaits its legitimate claimant. When news of the Horowitz fortune reached Europe all bearers of that name formed themselves into Horowitz syndicates in those countries where bearers of the family name resided.

Another unclaimed fortune of millions still agitates all bearers of the name of Bernstein. Bernstein was likewise a poor boy who emigrated to the United States in the '70s and died leaving no heirs.

Explorers Now Direct

Efforts Underground

Cobleskill, N. Y.—With the last frontier pushed into the Pacific exploration in America takes a new direction downward. The same romantic urge that once lured men into the western wilderness manifests itself today in the current fever for exploring subterranean passages, of which the latest to excite interest is the eerily-beautiful Howe caverns near here.

"But exploration today is exploration de luxe," Harry Edward Freund of Chicago, director of the American research foundation, stated following a visit to the caves. A bulletin issued by the foundation cites the hazards incurred in dim torch-lit galleries by early explorers of the place, then con-

"fawn caverns, in Schularic country, are little known to tourists, having been off the beaten motor path until recently. Completion of a mile-long stretch of road between the cave lodge and State Route 7, midway between Albany and Binghamton, has assisted in placing the caverns as a wonder to be sought in the state fairs in upstate New York.

Find Indian Tomhawk
in Walls of Old Mansions

Northfield, N. H.—Installed in the walls of the Marion square meet the old Indian tomhaws, or clubs, of David Hilton, the first white settler in New Hampshire about 1740. The clubs found in the walls were collected by Thomas Holling, an electrician engaged in wiring the house, which was built in 1740 by Elizabeth R. to Captain of Riga, John, who was the last grantee of the old estate which was originally granted by Thomas I, King of England.

The frequent Indian raid of those days is told by Holling authoritatively. Mrs. Phoebe McLean, M. E. C.; Mrs. Jeanie Mitchell, M. E. C.

Copper Mines of Chile
Worked by the Aztecs?

What is now the world's largest known copper ore deposit was worked by the prehistoric Incas, judging by remains that have been found at and near the copper mines of Chuquicamata, Chile. Within the mine, primitive tools have been found from time to time, such as stone hammers and wooden shovels, as well as mummified remains of early Indian miners, one of which is now at the American Museum of Natural History in New York.

The ruins of Pucara, an ancient fortified city destroyed by the Spaniards during their first invasion of Chile, are 25 miles from Chuquicamata. Ancient graves belonging to this prehistoric city have yielded bowls and other utensils of copper as well as lead necklaces made from brooches and anatocite, minerals characteristic of the Chuquicamata deposits.

The Incas, reputed as pre-Columbian America's best miners and metal workers, conquered this part of Chile about 1445. It is reliably estimated, and the old mines may, therefore, have been worked at least ninety years before the discovery of America.—Kansas City Star's Science Service.

Food "on the Hoof" Not

What They Looked For

Three unemployed miners having emigrated to South Africa, and not being successful in obtaining employment, decided to journey up country, where, far away from civilization, they came across an explorer's depot, fully stocked with food.

After a few days, when the stores had become exhausted, and all three fed up, yet very hungry, one of their number decided to go in search of food, with the avowed determination to bring back something to eat even if it were a lion. He had not searched far when he encountered a lion, which was also in search of food.

The lion at once bounded toward the man, who turned and sped as rapidly as humanly possible toward the hut. On nearing the hut door, which was open, he stumbled and fell, too precipitately for the lion to recover, which pounced into the hut. When the man poked himself up, he quickly pulled the hut door to, and shouted to his mates inside: "Here you are! Skin that whilst I fetch another."—London Answers.

Ain't It the Deuce?

The shipwrecked tourist had had terrible experiences on South Sea Islands, so on this occasion he did not relish his fate. Faint with fatigue he dragged himself toward the distant voices. At last he caught a glimpse of the party—they were sitting in a circle on the sand and holding objects, unrecognizable at the distance, close to their noses.

"This is some hand!" snorted one. "Aw, rats!" came the raucous voice of another. "I only pulled a couple of bones from that pot."

The tourist rolled over on the sand and just before he breathed his last gasped:

"Cannibals again!" — Pathfinder Magazine.

The pastor called to the several of his friends and said: "This poor man has no much faith in the Lord we should not let him be disappointed. Let's make a collection for him." They contributed $12 which was sent to the ingenious negro.

Next day the colored man gave the pastor another letter. This one ran: "Dear Lord, doesn't this you send me some money, don't send it then no person need it to me, dear Lord."

STYLES CHANGE IN TRADE FAIRS

Were Necessity in Middle Ages for the Disposal of Goods

Washington.—The opening of the spring industrial fair in Leipzig, Germany, where trade fairs of some sort have been held annually for 700 years, emphasizes at once the age of this method of carrying on trade, and the changes that have been made under modern conditions of mass production, modern transportation, and wide distribution, says a bulletin from the Washington, D. C. headquarters of the National Geographic Society.

"Fairs, as devices through which to dispose of goods, were in use in Europe during the early centuries of the Christian era, and became important in the Middle Ages," the bulletin declares. "It was then that two of the most outstanding fairs of today took shape, that at Lyons, France, and that at Leipzig. The latter dates from about 1170. One of the best known fairs, that at Nizhni Novgorod, Russia, was not founded until the Seventeenth century, but since that time it has been of great importance to the diversified peoples from the Orient who gathered there to exchange their wares."

"Goods Fairs" at First.

"These and the many similar fairs that existed in Europe were at first 'goods fairs,' to which were brought great quantities of the actual goods to be bartered or sold. There was no standardization of products in those days and no cheap and efficient transportation systems; and the standards of business ethics were low. It was essential that the actual goods to be bought should be handled, examined, and haggled over."

"After railroads criss-crossed Europe and 'sample runners' (the European version of 'drummers' or commercial salesmen) were sent out in increasing numbers by manufacturers, the goods fairs were no longer necessary in the commercial scheme of things. A number of the old fairs went out of existence under these conditions. Others, notably the Leipzig and Lyons fairs, modified their methods and have become of even more importance. Instead of assembling goods in great warehouses for sale, fairs now bring together hundreds and thousands of articles as samples. Would-be buyers come from all parts of the world, examine the samples, confidently accept the word of agents that goods furnished by the factories will be as represented, and place their orders."

Sample Fair Rises Rapidly.

"The rise of the sample fair has been most pronounced since the World War. Among the leading ones now operating, in addition to those at Leipzig and Lyons, are fairs at Paris, London, Birmingham, Vienna, Prague, Gutemberg, Salzburg and Valencia, to mention only a few."

"While some modern sample fairs deal with a practically unlimited variety of products, others specialize in certain classifications. Leipzig is probably the greatest of the broad fairs. Lyons, too, has a variety of products but emphasizes silk. The Paris fair concerns itself largely with French goods, and the London and Birmingham fairs are exclusively for British products. The sample fair in its broad aspects has not yet become established in the United States, but may be on the way."

Book Borrowed in '89

Richmond, Va.—In June, 1889, Rev. Rufus Pegg of Burlington, N. C., borrowed a book from Mr. and Mrs. William M. Cates of Gibsonville, in that state.

Recently C. E. Cates of Burlington, a son, got the book back. It seems that Reverend Mr. Pegg, a circuit elder, forgot the loan. At any rate, it reposed in his library for years, and after his recent death a relative discovered the book and Mrs. Cates' name in it. He returned the book, expressing regret that it had been kept so long.

Sea Is Engulfing

"Island of Dead"

Athens.—The Island of Pontikon, famed in classic story as the home of Neptune and better known by the more romantic title, "Island of the Dead," is in danger of sinking into the sea.

A commission of engineers who recently studied the island off the Greek coast reports that, unless a number of breakwaters are constructed, the waves that have undermined the cliffs will soon dash their work.

To save the island a fund has been started by the Archbishop of Corfu, Sir Basil Zaharoff, the armaments millionaire who lives in Paris, has guaranteed half the sum required if the Greek government will raise the rest. Pontikon gained its name, "Island of the Dead," from a painting by Rocklins. The painting shows Charon ferrying one of his ghostly passengers to its forbidding cliffs.

Surely Was Primitive

"Primitive!" exclaimed the New Hampshire man. "Primitive! Say there was a man in our town—die five years ago—that couldn't read no write. He made up his mind his boys were going to have a schooling, though and sent the first one off one day, with an almanac. The boy came home and brought back the almanac, said the teacher told him he'd have to have a primer."

"The old man says 'You go back to that teacher and tell her that when she's learned to all there is in this almanac, I'll buy ye a primer.'"

"He was primitive," allowed the visitor.

"Say, one time he went into the store here, and he says to the man: 'See here! I'm tired of buyin' an almanac every year. Can't ye sell me one of those leather-covered almanacs, one that'll last me?'

"Well," the storekeeper knew him and knew he couldn't read. So he sold him leather-covered Testament.

"Thar," Oliver says, "thar ye be. That's the kind of almanac I've wanted a long time." And he went off home satisfied.—Boston Globe.

Abundant Proof That

Animals Change Color

Though many an animal in the Arctic regions will change its coat to white for the winter months, there are few animals who turn gray, as human beings do, from old age. Animals are, however, susceptible to fright and shock, and this may cause their hair or fur to change to white, just as in the case of human beings.

Domestic pets are naturally more susceptible to this than animals who are used to fending for themselves in the wild. The black coat of a dog will sometimes turn practically white if the dog has a fit or falls victim to a very bad bout of distemper. Cats are not immune from shock. Horses' coats often seem to change quite appreciably in color, but this may be only a matter of clipping. A horse that has been turned out for some time and then brought in to be clipped will become a light fawn color after the operation, when before it he seemed a dark chestnut. You wouldn't know he was the same horse!

Old Roman Road in England

The old Fosse way, which is to be reopened in its Warwickshire section, is the early English name for the Roman road that ran from Lincoln to Exeter, writes "Looker On" in the London Daily Chronicle. Practically the whole of the original Roman line is still in use, although in parts it has dwindled to a lane.

From Lincoln its course may be traced through Newark and Leicester to High Cross, where it is intersected by another famous Roman road, Watling street, at a point known as the "center of England." Then it proceeds through Cirencester and Bath to the half-forgotten Roman encampment of Ilchester, though the road itself is here in fine condition. After Ilchester, the Fosse way crosses the hills near Chard into Devonshire and then enters Exeter.

Soldering Aluminum

Contrary to general opinion, soldered joints in aluminum are easily made and are as strong when first made as other metals. They fail, however, without exception a few weeks or even hours after exposure to mild corrosives, because during soldering, the solder dissolves some of the aluminum, forming alloys, generally of tin or zinc. These corrode so readily they even disintegrate in damp air, but where complete protection is afforded, as by painting, immersion in oil, etc., soldering is sometimes rather impracticable in the case of utensils.

Tastes Differ

A farmer took his wife to a concert and after listening with apparent joy the pair suddenly became interested in one of the choruses: "All we, like sheep, have gone astray."

First a sharp soprano voice exclaimed, "All we, like sheep"; next a deep voice uttered in a most earnest tone, "All we, like sheep." Then all the singers at once asserted, "All we, like sheep."

"Well, I don't!" exclaimed the farmer to his wife. "I like beef and bacon, but I can't bear mutton."

Handy Turpentine

Turpentine is a useful commodity, which is not often found in the kitchen. These are some of its uses: The thinning of paint, cleansing glazed tiles, porcelain bath and sinks. Applied with a stiff brush it will keep the gas cooker clean outside. Removes grease instantly from all surfaces. Mixed with floor polish helps the polish to go twice as far and removes spots from the floors. Mixed with black enamel, it makes a good paint for grates and gas stoves.

Ceased Living Phrase

"Almighty Dollar" is applied to money as the supposed object of worship in America. The phrase is attributed to Washington Irving, who is supposed to have it on the first to use it. It appears twice in his "Creole Village," which was published in England in 1847. Irving wrote: "In a word, the mighty dollar that great object of universal devotion throughout our land, seems to have no genuine devotee. In these peculiar villages."

Tim Wilson's "Roll"

By CHARLES S. REID

(Copyright)

THE shadows were growing long among the hills. Over the rugged trail leading upward from Cheowhee valley into the hills trudged a man. There was a buoyancy in his step, and pulse of his head which indicated abounding joy. Tim Wilson was getting home again after an absence of five years in the West; and it was more than a homecoming to his wife and mother, for a girl awaited him by all the virtue of a promise made those five years before. Tim had told her that he would wrench from the grasp of the world five thousand dollars before he returned to claim her. Tim had the five thousand in a bulgy roll of fifty one hundred-dollar bills.

Nature had gathered the sweetness of the mountain flowers and the brightness of the sunshine to mould the beauty of Sarey Goodmann; and Tim had carried the memory of it in his heart every day of the struggle and hard application of his five years of service in fortune hunting.

Old Hollis Goodman had built his cabin on a little plot between the hills and facing the Sheepnose cliff, more than fifty years before; and here Sarey would be waiting for Tim. The trail wound about the base of the cliff; but Tim chose to climb to the top of the rock, so that he might first gaze down upon the cabin that had sheltered Sarey for all these years.

Twilight was settling about the cabin. Old "Ringold," Sarey's dog, was lying asleep in front of the cabin door. Ringold was older but still faithful. Even a dog must be faithful to Sarey Goodman! Tim stood for some moments, his gaze dwelling upon the peaceful scene and the spot of his unending great joy.

"Sarey!" he murmured.

As if in answer to his heart call, a young woman came and stood framed in the doorway. Once more Tim's lips moved to utter the beloved name aloud. The girl was shading her eyes with her hand, and was gazing down the mountain trail as if expecting some one. Tim's heart thumped in his breast. He pictured Sarey standing thus every evening looking for his return. Now the sun rose to his lips, but died away unuttered. Some one else was hurrying up the trail to meet the girl.

Tim Wilson slumped to his knees on the rock. As the young couple walked arm in arm to the cabin door Tim's hand crept down into his trouser pocket and drew forth the roll of bills he had treasured there. He tried to crush them, but the bulky roll refused to be compressed. Opening his palm he looked down upon the greenish paper mass. Slowly regaining his feet he advanced to the narrow edge of the cliff, where he stood for a moment convulsed by body and soul over the story which the little scene below seemed to have revealed. Again he glanced at the roll in his opening palm. It was held together by a stout rubber band. Here were the savings of five years of toll and privations gathered together for Sarey. He had brought it thus that it might lay it upon her palm.

"Well, she shall have it as my part, my gift," he mused.

Bundling his body hackett for a supreme effort, and swinging his right arm through a sweeping arc, he hurled the package of currency with perfect aim toward the doorway of the cabin. A bird winging homeward to its nest the roll landed upon the floor with a little thud attracting the attention of all those within, a stumped old man, two young women and a young man. The elder of the girls seized the strange object from the floor.

"Lord, what a lot of money!" she exclaimed, hugging the roll to her bosom. "I wonder—"

Suddenly she darted from the cabin into the yard beyond. Halting a few feet from the step she looked all about.

"Tim," she shouted; "Oh, Tim! Then a moment later: "Don't you try to hide from me, Tim! I know you've come home!"

"Tim," she shouted; "Oh, Tim! Then a moment later: "Don't you try to hide from me, Tim! I know you've come home!"

In the meantime Tim Wilson lay a crumpled heap not twenty steps away with a sprained ankle. A loose stone had rolled from beneath his foot, when he hurled the roll of bills into the cabin doorway; and his body had shot downward to the rocks below. A moment later he would have started down out of the hills again forever. On hearing his name called he sat up and grimmed cynically. But the movement of his body had not escaped the girl's attention; and the next moment she was beside Tim.

"Yeah, Sarey; I'm back again; but yes, I wish I hadn't come!"

"For the land sakes, Tim Wilson what you talkin' about?"

Tim was silent a moment. "Well, Sarey; I got a busted foot, and—what's your man, Sarey?"

Sarey gazed down upon him. "The Lord he's run Tim Wilson, as if I'd ever had any other man but you."

"Sarey!" Tim dragged himself quickly to his full height and said, " Didn't I see you in the arms of a man?"

Sarey laughed, and the smile of a girl came back from the ravine below in a silvery beam. "That was little Sarey, her man. She's proved it and got married since you left Tim."

"Lord, Sarey; I'd 'a' been comin' away from here if I hadn't got this foot busted. Thank God I got the tumble!"

LAKWOOD BEGINS SEASON
NEXT MONDAY

Lakewood will begin its season next Monday, May 26, with all the usual summer activities in full swing. The Golf Course with its new and intriguing play at the 8th and 9th tees, has already been much used and highly praised. Under the management of Wentworth L. Haynes the Inn will be open for luncheon on Monday, and thereafter serve dinner, breakfast and luncheon each day, with special arrangements caring for the numerous bridge, tea and other parties which will mark the season. As a new wing has been erected the Inn will have additional facilities for the culinary department to facilitate the preparation and service of an excellent cuisine.

Every effort will be made to make the season at the Lakewood Country Club one of the most delightful on record. In order that the finest orchestras may be had, a contract was given the National Orchestra Attractions, who have under contract some of the most famous dance music makers in the country. The first dance at Lakewood Country Club will be on Friday night, May 30, and a second dance is to be held the following night, Saturday May 31. The White Cotton Pickers will supply the music for both occasions. This band is made up of eleven talented musicians, a majority of whom are former Ohio University men who played with the glee and dance orchestras through their college years. They will provide vocal entertainment as well as the dance numbers. The White Cotton Pickers will be a good example of the type of orchestras to be expected at the regular dances through the season every Friday night at the Lakewood Country Club.

The outstanding event of the day at Lakewood will be the opening performance of the 30th season of the Lakewood Players, at 7:30 P. M. on Sunday evening, next Monday May 26. The Lakewood Players is the oldest dramatic organization in America. Through the quality of its performances and the unusual production made at the theater by the players, it has achieved national fame. Under Herbert L. Sweet, General Manager of Lakewood, Howard Lindner and Sam T. Coffey will once more direct the talents of the players.

A soprano and other vocalists by Lester Howard, "Eliza" in "Sleeps Out," will be the opening play. Two new members of the company are to appear on this occasion. Beatrice Terry and Hilda Adele, of the old and popular members of Lakewood, will see performances by Frances Glandier, Weston Hall and one or two others of the regulars.

There is no playwright more adept in creating situations of comic import and writing dialogue to fit them than Leslie Howard, author of "Elizabeth Sleeps Out." The action takes place in the parlor of an old home in Murray Hill section of New York, haunt of aristocrats. On Murray Hill lived two maiden ladies named Tweedle, Mid Victorian to the core they were training their very attractive niece to walk in their spinster ways.

It was the day of a family memorial service and an out of town relative, unknown by sight, was scheduled to be present. Being in no physical condition for so sombre an event, he failed to appear and a young and attractive matron was introduced in his stead. The young matron was there because he had seen the niece's eyes and thought them more than intriguing. That the fun begins, the young man runs up, there is a wild capade with the maiden aunts involving a general riot of laugh and fun, incidents of course, all ends happily and every one is truly cheerful at the end of a perfect day.

It is the plan that this 30th season of the Lakewood Players shall be the most brilliant in its entire history. Howard Lindner is confident, despite the artistic heights reached last year, another enviable record will be broken in this chapter of its history.

Promise is made that an unusual number of brilliant Broadway stars will come to Lakewood this season either in new, or

The Rocking Chair

Is the rocking chair to fall by the way, a victim of the fleeting whims of fashion? asks the Lebanon Reporter. One alleged authority on home decoration insists that the "ensemble idea" is now the thing and that the rocking chair simply will not "fit in" with any grouping of furniture. Will we yet come to the time when the courts will recognize a valid reason for divorce in the fact that the husband simply will not "fit in" with the fashion of the furniture, or the color scheme of the parlor decorations, or some other requirements of the fashion of the day in household matters? What every man knows—and most women, if they will but admit the truth—is that there is no seat more grateful to the tired human frame than an intelligently modeled rocking chair. By that we mean a rocking chair built in complete forgetfulness that there is any such thing as "fashion" in chairs; we mean chairs that are made to sit in instead of to admire. Style has robbed us of a lot of things and we haven't done much protesting. But we'll be doggone if we don't propose to have something to say before we'll give up the good old-fashioned rocking chair.

The mule stubbornly refuses to be ousted by the farm tractor or the truck in this country, as statistics show that we have under the harness 1,000,000 more of the long-eared hybrids in this country than in the days before the adoption of the gasoline as an agency for the heavier of heavy burdens. It was predicted earlier in the coming of the tractor that the mule would be the first of draught animals to yield to the mechanical rival, but predictions have failed, for there are today 5,500,000 of the beasts of burden in the United States, which shows an increase of more than 1,000,000 in the last decade. The modern mule is an improvement over his forerunner in disposition, and by a more kindly handling in cothold has become almost kickless. If breeders could go further and breed a brayless hybrid he would be the most desirable of all animals that pull our plows.

The new criminal who honestly represents society's ineffectual efforts at self protection may be of minor interest to the bored reader, says the Richmond Times Dispatch, but he certainly presents a problem for our penologists. Theirs is becoming a most hazardous occupation. And it is useless to try to explain him and his mad-dog propensities with statistics dealing with overcrowding, uncomfortable living conditions and plain fare; our convicts have never been maintained in the style to which they become accustomed during their periods of affluence. He is the product of a state of mind, and therefore a real problem.

If you will find a million-year-old skeleton in China, that only has a bearing on our past. But if you find a 50-cent piece in an old imperial that affects your future.

Swedish Youth Hailed Mathematical Wizard

Stockholm, Sweden.—A Swedish prodigy, who at twenty-one years of age has received his Ph. D. degree in mathematics, has been discovered in Bengt Stroemgren, of Lund, now attached to the department of mathematical-natural science at the University of Copenhagen. He was born in 1908, his father being the internationally famous astronomer, Ellis Stroemgren. Matriculating in 1925, he received his first degree in 1927. Even prior to entering the university Stroemgren surprised his teachers by his knowledge of mathematics and astronomy.

It is told that when the Danish Greenland explorer, Peter Freuchen, once visited Prof. Ellis Stroemgren for the solving of an intricate astronomical problem, he was referred to the son. Freuchen is said to have become enraged when he was introduced to the seventeen-year-old lad, feeling that a bad joke was being played on him, but his anger soon vanished as young Bengt in a swift and clear manner unraveled the problem.

He paid his fine.

Nations approach forestry with reluctance and only when impelled by necessity. They are driven to forestry by different paths says the American Tree Association. Some countries are forced to forestry by lack of water supply, others to save their hill-sides from being gullied and beaten by the rains. Still other countries seek forests to protect them from floods and drought, others to provide their peoples with lumber and fuel.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Senate Votes for Transfer of Prohibition Bureau to Law Department.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

TRANSITION of the prohibition bureau from the Treasury department to the Department of Justice was voted by the Senate. This measure, the first and one of the most important of the law enforcement bills, was passed without a record vote and having previously been put through the house it went to the President for signature after a few minor changes had been concurred in by the house.

Several of the senators criticized certain features of the bill, especially the dual control of industrial alcohol by the Treasury and Justice departments, but Tydings of Maryland was the only one to offer amendments and his suggestions were speedily voted down. Mr. Tydings argued earnestly in favor of an amendment to permit the use of only nonpoisonous denaturants in industrial alcohol, asserting that present practice was, in effect, giving the death penalty to a man who commits no greater crime than violation of the prohibition law. But a large majority of the senators evidently believed the statement of Sheppard of Texas that "poisonous matter put in industrial alcohol is not used in sufficient proportions to kill."

Senator Carter Glass of Virginia said the transfer of the prohibition bureau should have been made years ago, but he attacked the Wickerham commission for "wasting" nearly $250,000 and voted for that sum. More. He said he would propose a resolution calling for a statement of the course of a committee before any additional money is appropriated. He asserted that the commission had been doing its best "inquiring into" the depth of non-observance of the law.

Under the terms of the bill, Dr. James M. Tydings, present commissioner of prohibition, will remain in the Treasury department with the title of commissioner of industrial alcohol. At the same time William D. McMillen will have the appointment of a new commissioner of prohibition in the Department of Justice.

In connection with Tydings' attack on the personnel of his office it should be said that Commissioner Doran says his friends have found that the many cases of "fake" prohibition within the districts of law judicial gingers are caused by crooked and not by incompetent, the industrial alcohol denaturants prescribed by federal regulations.

F. SCOTT McBRIDE, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, was before the Senate today committee several days and was an interesting and combative witness. Despite the vigorous attack of Senator Blaine of Wisconsin and some rather damaging admissions, he upheld his side of the controversy fairly well. At one time he admitted that the league does not interest itself greatly in the economic views of a candidate, that his principal aim is to insure the election of men who will vote right on prohibition, and that it sometimes supports dry voting wet drinking candidates for office.

Plans to force a showdown vote on pending proposals to authorize a national referendum on repeal of the Eighteenth amendment or legalize the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer were agreed upon by members of the house wet bloc.

EXAMINATION of the London Naval Treaty occupied the time of the Senate committee on foreign relations and naval affairs and the hearing before the former body attracted especially audience. Secretary of State Stimson and Admiral William V. Pratt were the main witnesses heard.

by that committee, both of whom defending the pact vigorously.

Answering objections to the cruiser provisions of the treaty, which limit the United States to eighteen 8-inch gun cruisers and require the construction of 6-inch gun vessels if this country is to build up to the pact tonnage levels, Mr. Stimson said that the American delegation had followed the wisest course when it decided on a larger percentage of the smaller cruisers. By building a larger proportion of 6-inch gun cruisers, Mr. Stimson asserted the United States had a better chance of obtaining actual parity than if all 8-inch gun cruisers were built.

Before the naval affairs committee Secretary of the Navy Adams undertook to reply to the attacks of Chairman Hale on the treaty. Mr. Adams said that Japan had insisted upon this country's coming down from its proposal for twenty-one 8-inch gun cruisers and that the American delegation pushed its demand as far as possible without breaking off negotiations with Great Britain and Japan. The naval secretary added that he considered the delegation made a fair compromise with Japan.

In England and in Japan there are groups opposing the treaty, each insisting, as do the American objectors, that the other nations got the best of the deal.

With Arthur Henderson, British foreign secretary, as mediator, conversations were held at Geneva by Aristotle Baland and Dino Grandi looking to a solution of the Franco-Italian deadlock over naval parity. Satisfactory progress was made, and further negotiations will be carried on over the North and South poles and the Atlantic crossing.

PRESIDENT HOOVER'S nomination of Senator J. Roberts to fill the vacancy on the Supreme Court bench was referred to a subcommittee of the Senate committee on judiciary and it was learned a favorable report would be made soon to the full committee. Confirmation by the Senate was anticipated. Since little opposition was voted, a vote of the full Senate at first seemed likely. Mr. Roberts was said to have made a speech against the Ladd amendment several years ago, but afterwards appeared again with a plenitude of support for it.

President Green of the American Federation of Labor indicated that no new labor law could be made without the support of the Senate.

By a vote of 31 to 27 the Senate passed the trial of the bill sponsored by Wagner of New York for the purpose of relieving unemployment through federal aid. This measure provides for an appropriation of $500,000,000 for the creation of a federal bureau of unemployment headed by a director who would cooperate with state and local unemployment agencies. The other two bills provide for the gathering of labor statistics and for a joint commission to expedite federal construction work.

Another important measure passed by the Senate places Mexican immigration under the national origination system and, if it becomes law, will reduce the number of Mexican immigrants from 50,000 a year to fewer than 20,000.

GOV. WALTER J. ROHLEH of Wisconsin was acquitted by a jury in Sheboygan of the charge of having violated the state corrupt practices act during his primary campaign in 1928. The attorneys for the state prepared to carry the case to the state Supreme court, but the governor and his friends consider that he has been fully vindicated.

DWIGHT W. MORROW, in a speech opening his campaign for the Republican senatorial nomination in New Jersey, declared he favored repeal of the Eighteenth amendment and restoration to the states of the power to determine their policy toward the liquor traffic. He thinks national prohibition is a mistake because it is not practicable but he is against the return of the saloon.

UNCLE SAM wishes to know whether or not the Radio Corporation of America, Westinghouse Electric, General Electric and seven affiliated concerns are violating the Sherman antitrust law in pooling their patents and operations in the field of radio equipment manufacture. Therefore the Department of Justice has filed suit against these companies. Owen D. Young, head of R. C. A., professes to welcome this action, hoping it will clear up a confusing patent situation in the radio industry.

EARL ADMIRAL RICHARD E. BYRD, returning from his epochal exploration of the Antarctic region, landed in the Canal Zone last week with five members of his expedition. They were given an enthusiastic welcome at Balboa and again at Panama and planned to remain on the isthmus about two weeks. In another month the admiral will come back to Virginia and his home state will greet him in Richmond with highest honors. Gov. John Garland will present to him a sword purchased by more than ten thousand of his fellow citizens, and there will be banquets and receptions. The sword, designed in silver and gold, commemorates the famous flights over the North and South poles and the Atlantic crossing.

LAST week saw the passing of another famous Arctic explorer, Dr. Fridtjof Nansen, who died of pleuritis at his home in Oslo, Norway, at the age of sixty-eight years. For many years he had been devoted to scientific explorations in the Far North, the most important of his trips being the expedition of the Fram in 1893. But Doctor Nansen was more than an explorer, having gained distinction as a teacher, author, humanitarian, statesman and diplomat. During the war he was high commissioner for repatriation of prisoners, and later was Norway's representative to the League of Nations and head of a Russian relief commission. These activities won him the Nobel peace prize.

LEADERSHIP of the civil disbandment campaign in India passed last week into the hands of Ms. Sarojini Naidu, a distinguished Hindu poetess, and she proceeded to lead her forces against the government salt workers of Dharwar. The police prevented the raid by blocking the road, and one arrested the poetess but released her.

In the northwestern part of India the revolt was increasing in seriousness and the situation in Lahore and other important cities was said to be growing worse daily. A great number of persons of Sholapur, after severing relations with the troops, but later the soldiers ousted the natives and martial law was proclaimed there.

As told to the trials of the British, they are having trouble with the wild border tribes along the Afghan frontier and have subjected them to strict hunting.

PRESIDENT CHIANG Kai-shek of China is proceeding with the utmost vigor to crush the rebellion of the northern provinces and his well-trained troops are reported to have gained a great victory in Anhwei province in a six-day battle, taking 10,000 prisoners and killing many. Pursuing the rebels, the Nationalists captured their new base at Kweilin in Honan province. Captured at that city, the Nationalists asserted, would force the northerners to fall back upon Kufeng to consolidate their shattered ranks.

All foreigners were asked by their consuls to get out of the city of Chengchow, which has been repeatedly bombed by Nationalist planes and was expected to be the center of severe fighting.

SUCCESS crowned the efforts of the first of this year's Atlantic ocean flyers Jean Mermoz of France and two companions, carrying mail from Paris, leaped off from St. Louis, Senegal, Africa, and landed at Natal, Brazil, 20 hours and 10 minutes later, having flown the 2,070 miles across water unerringly despite a terrific electric squall through which they passed.

Col. Pablo Solar, star aviator of the Mexican air force and Lieut. Carlos Rivas, who started on a nonstop flight from Mexico to Buenos Aires, were killed when their plane crashed into the sea off Port Simon, Costa Rica. They were attempting to land during a sudden storm.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Floyd Unwin, unsuccesful in life's battle, and deserted by Howard Bettington, painter of me note, but not wealthy, take dinner with their college associate, Alfred Gibbs, a man of great magnate. Unwin shows a written confession which he had taken while in college, to prove each other in adversity, explaining he needed financial assistance for his education. He has a beautiful daughter Mary. Gibbs scoffs at "legality" of the pledge, but agrees "make a place for Unwin's daughter in his organization. She is to call at office next day.

CHAPTER II.—Bettington arranges to help his old friend Unwin by painting some pictures and selling them. He is given a place in the old office of Radway's private stenographer. He is a man of vast wealth, but a deceiver. Calling at Gibbs' office, as arranged, Mary is asked by the financial to paint a picture of Gibbs for his money. The girl refuses, and leaves. Radway, exhausted by dissipation, announces his intention of taking a boat to the coast, but to be accompanied by a secretary and a wireless operator. His wife accepts his intention to go with him. Radway and Mary Unwin, his secretary on trial, and agrees that her brother CHAPTER III.—Bettington, painting the Maine coast, is caught in a storm and runs aground. In a shack by Jonathan Gibbs, next door to Bettington's clothes being ruined by the storm, and runs aground to the nearest town. On the way, he is captured by a motor boat and knocked senseless, afterward being conveyed to a jail and kept prisoner. Gibbs disappears, and Radway naturally assumes he is drowned. In painter's clothes he finds money in New York address, Bettington's. Gibbs goes to work. He is a fugitive from justice, and one night, freed without cause, he endeavors to escape by the fire escape, but falls to death.

The paragraph was headed: "Well-Known Painter Killed. Falls From Fire Escape in Dark." Bettington read an amazing description of his death, burial and life's end. The chief witness at the inquest was Floyd Unwin. Unwin had been amazed to see his friend, whom he thought to be out of town, and bed in his studio to call upon him. In rooms were seen in darkness and none answered the knock. The morning the janitor had discovered the mutilated body in the room. Floyd Unwin and he had identified it.

"It was a clever idea," said the Boss. "But I, too, read the papers, the list of poker, I have called bluff. In almost every case I had to do that to get my crew. Sam, for example. Sam, under his name, was doing rather well legging across the Canadian line. Only he was on the way to be respected. It was necessary to end him that he had broken from memory. I was compelled to build his past, I told it over him."

Boss waved his delicate hand. "It is a truism that knowledge is power. I have just told you that method I have the whip-hand that you call my 'first murderer' but why me in possession of Bettington demanded. "That's me as a very unwise step."

"Because, my dear Andrew Orme, I am as strong a hold over you." Bettington made a gesture of despair. Boss did not look the look of a crazed man; but this sort of talk pointed to something far from megalomania. He had the delusion of power. Andrew Orme," said Bettington, "is he?"

"It tell you." The Boss passed a cigar to the other. "Andrew had a clever idea," said the Boss. "But I, too, read the papers, the list of poker, I have called bluff. In almost every case I had to do that to get my crew. Sam, for example. Sam, under his name, was doing rather well legging across the Canadian line. Only he was on the way to be respected. It was necessary to end him that he had broken from memory. I was compelled to build his past, I told it over him."

Bettington hoped the other did not see the slight start he gave when he realized that Mary Unwin was here. He remembered now that she was Radway's private stenographer. He thought of Sam of Metzger and those other ill-mannered men who would be likely to make up such a crew as this. Something of the horror he could not conceal betrayed itself.

"Do not be alarmed," said the Boss; "this is an expedition planned only for the possession of money. The women will be safe as long as I rule; be sure of that."

"What is the scheme? Blackmail?" "Something simpler and cleaner. Radway has come aboard, as he himself almost believes, to rest. He has arduous tasks before him. I know—and he realizes it now—that he has come aboard to fill himself with the rich food and alcohol of his physicians have forbidden him for a year.

"Every year, I find, he has spent a month in this manner. At the end of these trips he goes back to his office and works like ten men. But this year he has had hardening arteries and planned to be temperate. That was why he brought his wife and that girl. . . . That was why he sent me this telegram." The Boss showed Bettington the wire Mary Unwin had sent to Clements' Bar Harbor. "He honestly intended to stay sober or moderately so."

"And won't he?"

"At dinner tonight he was offensively drunk. I heard his wife whisper after what you promised me, Elmer."

"Then you are a guest here?" It explained the luxurious state room in which the Boss sat.

did very well at Yale. It was his way to become a great success.

Then he found within himself a curse of gaming. He needed it. He found he possessed the secret gift of copying signatures. He worked. And when he was dis-

"I am not," said the Boss. "I occupy an anomalous position; in a sense a derogatory one. It so suits me, for our purposes, to play the part of the steward."

Bettington wondered why he felt a disinclination to ask this man who and what he was. He realized that he was in the presence of one from whom emanations of evil and unusual powers were given out. He was annoyed to admit it. With Sam or the rest of the crew it was different. They feared that the knowledge might bring them, if they forced him through disobedience to use it, to death or imprisonment. But no man had such a hold over Howard Bettington. And yet he experienced uneasiness in the presence of this small, eternally smiling man whose teeth he could wring with his powerful grasp as easily as one might choke the life out of a fowl.

"What part am I to play?" Bettington asked. "For a time, at any rate, he must seem to fall in with the other's plans.

"It may be very little," the Boss said. "This is how the matter stands. Radway can afford to be away from his office for a month. He has so arranged things that he is safeguarded for that time. But to stay away longer would ruin him. Another financier, Gibbs, is a dangerous antagonist. When the time comes, Radway will be offered the choice of ruin or a ransom of one million dollars. He will bluster, threaten and fight. In the end he will do as I have arranged."

"But the captain and the others?"

"Will be eliminated. I have taken every precaution. I shall seize the ship and dictate terms."

Bettington thought a moment.

"That's all very well," he cried, "but you can't carry off into captivity an international figure like Radway. Why, man, they'll send gunboats out and every ship we pass will be looking for us. There's no disguising a craft like this."

"There will be no alarm. Letters will be prepared written in Radway's hand, explaining that his health is benefiting slowly and that he will remain away for a few weeks longer.

Mrs. Radway will write to her father, the senator, and the girl secretary will send postals to her parents. . . . They will dismiss all suspicion."

"How?" Bettington demanded bluntly. "You'll threaten them with violence unless they write? The women won't do it, nor Radway either!"

"Nevertheless they will be written. For what purpose do you suppose? Andrew Orme, master forger, was dragged from Blackport, Maine?"

The Boss took some papers from a drawer. These he passed to Bettington.

"Here are letters written by Mrs. Radway and her husband. Study them closely. You are to birth in the next state room."

He led Bettington into an adjoining cabin. From it another room was seen.

"That," said the Boss, "is the doctor's office." He pointed to a parchment on which the name John White was inscribed. Bettington saw that White had taken his degree of doctor of medicine in the University of Pennsylvania fifteen years before.

"You will be known henceforth as Doctor White," said the Boss. "You will probably have very little to do but it was fortunate that Radway required a physician, otherwise you would have had to become a member of my crew. The real Doctor White, over whom I have some slight hold, lent me this and some implements of the trade, drugs and the rest of it. You will probably have to prescribe some sedatives for Radway."

Bettington knew nothing of medicine; he qualified at the idea of having to look after a really sick person.

"Your position as an officer will give you entry to the main saloon," the Boss went on. "You will be able to gain the confidence of the women and report to me what happens. In the role I have assumed I hear much, but not enough."

Bettington was glad to know that he would be in a position to watch over Unwin's girl. It is true she would not yet know his name. He supposed, until he had decided what best to do in the face of dangers, he had better keep up the masquerade.

The Boss took his acquiescence as a matter of course. It was not conceivable to that arrogant spirit that there should be insubordination.

"You will understand," he said, "that as a ship's doctor you will have little in common with the ship's steward. Or me you know nothing, except that I serve Elmer Radway."

"But I should like to know more," said Bettington. "To the best of my knowledge I have never seen you before. How is it you know me? Do you call me the 'Boss'? What does Radway call you?"

"I am William Clements to him," said the other. "I am William Clements to you. There is a stone over which the world thinks is my body, in a prison graveyard. I have explained in the world's eyes all my faults." He leaned forward and hid his hands, clenched again. "And yet, Andrew Orme, I shall make such a name for myself, that it will eclipse what the world knew of me ere it thought I died."

"Mad!" thought Bettington. "Crazed with the delusion of power." About he remarked: "I see you don't wish to tell me anything. Very well; I am not curious."

"You will tell Hallett, the captain. At dinner tonight he was offensively drunk. I heard his wife whisper after what you promised me, Elmer."

"Then you are a guest here?" It explained the luxurious state room in which the Boss sat.

need. If you take my advice you will turn in, now."

The advice was in the nature of a command; but as it suited his own convenience to get rid of Gibbs' clothes he bowed to it.

Bettington was glad to be in his new quarters. He could not sleep for a long time. By what blundering ways he was to save Unwin's children from harm he did not know. There must be, at least, a dozen men aboard, all under the domination of the Boss. The ship could not doubt be worked easily enough with Hallett, his nephew and Bob Unwin out of the way. As odd was his defiance of the Boss would aid none of them. There was a helplessness about the situation comparable with nothing on land.

CHAPTER V

A Millionaire's Holiday

Bettington was awakened in the morning by a small boy who was the bearer of coffee and rolls. He announced that breakfast would be served in the main saloon within the hour.

"This is all I need," said Bettington.

"What's your name?"

"They call me 'Slivers,'" said the boy, "but my real name is Augustus."

When he had dressed and shaved Bettington experienced the satisfaction of a fastidious man in finding himself once more in clean apparel.

On the quarter deck he found the Boss, who smiled the even, ungratified smile of the night before. Today he was in a neat blue and gold uniform.

"The captain and the others?"

"Will be eliminated. I have taken

10:45 Pre-Memorial Day Service in this church, with sermon by the pastor. Subject: "In Memoriam".

The Phantom Army of the Nation's dead who have laid their lives on the Altar of Country again march past the reviewing stand.

That we should gather in our churches to do them honor is fitting; but let us not forget the living, and the causes for which they gave the full measure of devotion.

Those who died, died not that they might glorify war, but that through their death "Peace on earth and good will toward men", might come on earth. It becomes, then, our sacred duty to preserve and maintain that which has been purchased for us at so great a cost.

The Comrades of the Way, will meet at the Chapel at 6:00, where cars will be waiting to take them to Gorham, N. H., where they will pay a visit to the Gorham chapter.
